What you are doing

Priya has bought from Nimbus Wellness since its first year. Last night she read the same community Facebook thread the Activity 4 audit flagged — customers saying Nimbus "doesn't feel personal anymore" — and she agrees. This morning she calls Customer Service, frustrated, wanting to know why the brand she used to feel loyal to now treats her like any other order number.

What you will produce: A customer-perspective analysis: the emotion behind Priya's words, a coaching note against the 3 P's, and one actionable insight for the relaunch team.

The scenario

The rep taking the call has a real average-handle-time target and a bank of quick-reply macros that would close this call in under two minutes. But leadership has asked every Customer Service call this week to be an active-listening opportunity, not just a resolution — because this exact situation is what the relaunch's active-listening approach will need to prove it can handle.

Your group of three will run this call as a role play, coached in real time against the 3 P's, then turn what was actually said — not just what was resolved — into a documented customer-perspective insight for the relaunch team.

Role assignment

Role	Played by	Goal
The Customer (Priya)		Be heard and taken seriously, not just processed
Nimbus Service Rep		Resolve the call by genuinely listening, not by closing it fast
Observer / Coach		Apply the 3 P's framework as a coaching lens on the call

Your steps

1. Assign the three roles — Customer (Priya), Nimbus Service Rep, Observer/Coach. Groups of three exactly. If your table has more, run two parallel trios rather than adding spectators.

2. Brief the Observer before the call starts — The Observer prepares a three-column note — Presence, Patience, Paraphrasing — and says NOTHING during the role play. Their only job is to record the moment and the exact words where each P appeared or was missed.
3. Brief Priya privately — Priya is not asking for a refund. She wants to know whether anyone at Nimbus still cares. She should not state this directly — she should express it as frustration about small things, the way real customers do. That gap is what the Rep must hear.
4. Brief the Rep on the real tension — The Rep has an average-handle-time target and macros that would close this in under two minutes. They must feel that pressure genuinely — the learning comes from choosing listening over speed while the pressure is real.
5. Run the call — Play it live for the full time. Do not stop to correct — the Observer's notes depend on the call running uninterrupted, including its mistakes.
6. Coach against the three P's — The Observer walks through their notes: Presence (was the Rep fully attending or queuing a macro?), Patience (did they let silences sit, or fill them?), Paraphrasing (did they reflect Priya's meaning back without judgement?). Cite specific moments and words, never general impressions.
7. Name the emotion behind the words — Separate the literal complaint from the emotion driving it. The words are about service speed and templates; the emotion is usually feeling forgotten by a brand she helped build. Write the emotion in one honest sentence.
8. Paraphrase Priya's perspective in one sentence — Draft the single sentence the Rep could have said that would have made Priya feel heard — without judgement and without minimising. Test it on the person who played Priya: would it have landed?
9. Write the actionable insight — Convert the call into one insight the relaunch team can act on. 'The customer was upset' is an observation, not an insight. 'Long-tenure customers read macro replies as evidence the brand has outgrown them' is actionable.

Your working space

Complete every field. You may keep this worksheet and refer to it during the open-book assessment.

Step 1 — Assign the three roles

Step 2 — Brief the Observer before the call starts

Step 3 — Brief Priya privately

Step 4 — Brief the Rep on the real tension

Step 5 — Run the call

Step 6 — Coach against the three P's

Step 7 — Name the emotion behind the words

Step 8 — Paraphrase Priya's perspective in one sentence

Step 9 — Write the actionable insight

Answers to the discussion prompts

1. As the call plays out, where does the Rep genuinely apply Presence, Patience and Paraphrasing — and where do they slip back into passive hearing?

2. What emotion is actually behind Priya's words, as distinct from the literal complaint she's making?

3. How would the Observer paraphrase Priya's perspective back in one honest sentence, without judgement and without minimising it?

4. Beyond "the customer was upset," what concrete, actionable insight should this call generate for the relaunch team?

Reflect & discuss

As the Customer, at what point in the call did you feel genuinely heard — or feel yourself give up on being heard?

As the Rep, was it harder to stay patient, or harder to paraphrase without sounding scripted?

As the Observer, which of the 3 P's was missing most often, and what would you coach first?

Check your work

Every group can show a completed customer-perspective analysis that names the emotion behind Priya's words (not just the words themselves), cites a specific moment where a P was applied or missed, and closes with one actionable insight for the relaunch team.
