What you are doing

The Marketing Lead has just shown your table Nimbus's most recent campaign: a two-week discount push on the best-selling serum, promoted purely on price. It performed well on sales, but the founder is uneasy — it never once mentioned the brand values from the LU1 attribute map, and a few loyal customers commented that it "felt like any other skincare sale."

What you will produce: A brand-audit report: consistency score, the missing identity elements, and two to three recommendations for brand-marketing integration.

The scenario

Before the relaunch campaign is greenlit, leadership wants proof that Nimbus's marketing activity is actually building the brand, not just borrowing short-term attention from it. Your table has been asked to audit the discount campaign against Nimbus's approved brand identity.

Your steps

1. Restate the brand identity — List the identity elements Nimbus has already approved — the concept line, the values, the hard and soft attributes from Activity 3. This is your audit standard; without it written down, the audit becomes opinion.
2. Inventory what the campaign actually said — Write down what the two-week discount push communicated: the serum, the price cut, the urgency. Be strict — record only what was actually said, not what the team intended to imply.
3. Compare element by element — Tick each identity element that appeared in the campaign and cross those that did not. The crosses are your finding, and there will be many.
4. Score consistency with evidence — Give a consistency score out of 10 and justify it in one sentence citing your ticks and crosses. A score without evidence is just a feeling.
5. Weigh the loyal-customer comment — Customers said it 'felt like any other skincare sale.' Discuss what that reveals: the campaign succeeded commercially while borrowing equity from the brand rather than building it. Both things are true at once, and the Board needs to hear both.

6. Size the gap — State how wide the gap is between what the campaign said and what the brand stands for — and whether one more campaign like it would materially damage the brand or merely fail to help it.
7. Write the recommendations — Two or three concrete changes that would make the next campaign build equity while still moving stock. Do not recommend abandoning promotions — recommend how a promotion can carry the brand's values while still being a promotion.

Your working space

Complete every field. You may keep this worksheet and refer to it during the open-book assessment.

Step 1 — Restate the brand identity

Step 2 — Inventory what the campaign actually said

Step 3 — Compare element by element

Step 4 — Score consistency with evidence

Step 5 — Weigh the loyal-customer comment

Step 6 — Size the gap

Step 7 — Write the recommendations

Answers to the discussion prompts

1. Which core identity elements from Nimbus's approved brand concept should this campaign have reflected — and which of them actually appeared in the discount push?

2. Was the discount campaign's messaging aligned with the brand's identity, or did it lean on price alone the way a generic competitor would?

3. Where exactly is the gap between what the campaign said and what the brand stands for — and how wide is it?

4. What two or three concrete changes would make the next relaunch-adjacent campaign build brand equity instead of just moving stock?

Reflect & discuss

Did your table's consistency score match what the loyal-customer comments already hinted at?

Was the gap you found about the message itself, or about which channel carried it?

If every future Nimbus campaign scored this low on brand alignment, what would that do to the 5th-anniversary relaunch's credibility?

Check your work

Every group can show a brand-audit report with a consistency assessment score for the discount campaign, the specific identity elements that were missing, and two or three concrete recommendations for better brand-marketing integration.
